TO VISIT SOUTH CAROLINA. The Winter Cruise of the North American Squadron. An extended tour through tropical seas and a visit to the north coast of South America, are the important points in the itinerary of the North Atlantic Squadron, which will begin its annual winter cruise on November 25. An interesting feature of the cruise will be the holding of gradunted speed trials for all the vessels of the fleet, off Barren Island, Chesapeake Bay, before starting for the Caribbean The squadron will spend four days at Charleston, S. C., during the Exposition, and will stop at ports in Cuba, Porto Rice, the Isthmus of Panama, Colombia, the northeast coast of Venezuela, and the Dunish West Indies. This will be the first reasion on which the entire fleet has visthe South American coast, and this fact, with the possibility of an early condusion of negotiations for the purchase ends additional interest to the cruise.

The trying out of the engines of all the cessels of the fleet for the purpose of ascriaining whether they have detectorated vessels of the fleet for the purpose of ascortaining whether they have deteclerated in any way through service, has been ordered at the suggestion of Rear Admiral Melville, in charge of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department.

The trials will be made according to the graduated speed system under which each ship is run at low, medium and high speed, successively.

Having coaled at Newport News, and having taken on provisions at Hampton Roads, the squadron will leave the latter place on December 1, stop at Charleston, and then sail direct to Havana, where it is scheduled to arrive December II, for a five days stay. Christmas Day will be speat at Culebra Island, Porto Rico, where the squadron will remain for a full month. After touching at various ports the fiset will spend four days at Clenfuegos, and then sail almost due south in Colon, arriving there Esbruary 2. The Caribbean ports will be visited for a few days at a time, and the Danish West Indies will be reached the latter part of March. The start homeward will begin April 21 from—Sen Junn, Porto Rico, the course being laid direct to New York.
